

A TESTAMENT OF HOPE

Today, I chose to plant words that bloom tomorrow
So, procrastination will not become my sorrow
I welcome the year with words my ink can't articulate
Layer by layer, on positivity, my hopes accumulate

My faith shall not fret in the days ahead
Nor shall new tax laws put my finances in dread
My year shall be healthy, clothed in paracetamol
And in jubilation, my dashiki shall dance evermore

Let every scar I endured stand as proof I survived
And in double portions, let what was lost be revived
This year shall walk in achievement, never in haste
Racing with no one, but with the echoes of my former self

Each month will feel my impact
In every situation, I shall choose not to react
My lips shall be stained with truth,
And in my growth, I shall not forget my roots

Time and patience shall not give up on me
My schedules shall walk with punctuality
The excesses of life are not my concern
Only what aligns with me is what I'll discern

This year shall bring forth good tidings
Every lost course shall find new beginnings
The drums of past errors shall beat no more
Nor shall the sounds of regret echo as before

One step at a time, I will grow with grace
One word, then another, I will not rush my pace
It may not be perfect, but it shall be great
History will have no choice but to mark the date

The wind will carry off my careless worries
Gone for good, like old forgotten lorries
What once burdened me shall fuel my motivation
This is my prophecy, more than affirmation

I will leave a gentle mark on every heart I touch
Without favouritism or division, embracing all as much
Honouring the shared essence of humanity
Whether Islam, Buddhism, or Christianity

I shall not punch above my weight,
Nor disrespect my elders or my mate
I will follow all with love as my guide
And strive with every vein to please my Creator above

Whether in envy or dispute, I will hate no one
In love, friendship, or pain, I will trouble none
I shall not let anger pilot me
Nor will I let fear silence me

I will focus more on the things I love
And surround myself with those I'm fond of
I shall not waste my days seeking validation,
Nor chase approval born of negativity or frustration

I shall be me and let the world be them
I will speak my truth and stand by it then
I will fight my battles, not carry another man's curse
I will live the life I love and what's mine, will find me first.

I write my days in purpose, in truth, and in rhyme
My dreams are more ambitious beyond eight to five
And when the year asks what I've achieved, I'll reply; a better version of me.